

Erika Cudworth (e.calvo@uel.ac.uk) is Professor of Feminist Animal Studies in Social Sciences at the University of East London, UK. Her research interests include complexity theory, gender, and human relations with non-human animals, particularly theoretical and political challenges to exclusive humanism. She is author of Environment and Society (2003), Developing Ecofeminist Theory (2005) and Social Lives with Other Animals (2011); co-author of The Modern State (2007); Posthuman International Relations (2011) and The Emancipatory Project of Posthumanism (2018); and co-editor of Technology, Society and Inequality (2013) and Anarchism and Animal Liberation (2015). Erika's current empirical projects are on animal companions and animals and war. She is also working on a critical reappraisal of the legacy of classical social theory for posthumanist scholarship.
